Further, Defendants Eagle Rio Energy Companies, Inc., Derek Taylor, and Nathan Madu are domiciled in the Northern District of Texas, where the Enforcement Action was filed. Accordingly, this Court has jurisdiction over Defendants pursuant to FED. R. CIV. P. 4(k)(1)(C) and 28 U.S.C. §§ 754 and 1692. Further, as the Court that appointed the Receiver, this Court has jurisdiction over any claim brought by the Receiver to execute Receivership duties.

III. STATEMENT OF FACTS

9. The Commission initiated the Enforcement Action on June 24, 2016, alleging, inter alia, that Faulkner violated the anti-fraud provisions of the federal securities laws through the offer and sale of securities through BOG, Crude Energy and Patriot. Upon motion by the Commission on August 10, 2017, this Court, acting ex parte, entered the Receivership Order, appointing Thomas L. Taylor III as temporary receiver for the oil and gas-related assets of Faulkner, BOG and BECC. That Receivership Order subsequently was expanded to include all assets of Faulkner and the Receivership Entities.

10. On December 18, 2019, the Receiver moved the Court for leave to initiate litigation against the Defendants, which the Court granted by order entered on the same day. Enforcement Action, Case No. 3:16-cv-01735-D (N.D. Tex. 2016), ECF No. 495.

A. The Breitling Fraudulent Scheme

11. The fraudulent scheme perpetrated by Faulkner and his confederates was undertaken primarily through the fraudulent offer and sale of oil and gas-related securities by BOG, BRC, BECC, Crude Energy, Crude Royalties, and Patriot (collectively, “Breitling”) from 2010 to 2016. Enforcement Action defendants Faulkner, Parker Hallam (“Hallam”) and Dustin Michael Miller Rodriguez (“Miller”) founded BOG and BRC in 2009 and 2010, respectively. Through these entities -- and later BECC, Crude Energy, Crude Royalties (together “Crude”), and Patriot<sup>2</sup> -- Faulkner orchestrated and implemented a multi-million-dollar fraudulent scheme through the offer and sale of oil and gas-related securities to investors. Breitling solicited and received funds from investors regularly from approximately January 2011 through at least February 2016, totaling almost $150 million in gross proceeds.

<sup>2</sup> Faulkner used Crude and Patriot at times relevant to this Complaint as “d/b/a” aliases of Simple Solutions, Inc., and certain funds transferred on behalf of Crude and Patriot were transferred from Simple Solutions, Inc. bank accounts.

12. From the inception of BOG and BRC, Faulkner served as said entities' President and Chief Executive Officer, controlled their overall direction, and managed their day-to-day operations.

13. The main business activity of BOG and BRC was the management and syndication of oil and gas-related investments. BOG offered and sold securities (typically denominated as "Units") related to oil and gas working interests. BRC offered and sold securities (typically denominated as "Interests") related to oil and gas royalty and overriding royalty interests. The terms of BOG and BRC securities offerings were provided to public investors through offering materials in the form of private placement memoranda, confidential placement memoranda and other marketing brochures ("Offering Memoranda"). The Breitling Offering Memoranda were replete with material misrepresentations and omissions of material facts.

14. At the core of Faulkner's scheme were the working interest-related offerings, which contained estimates of how much it would likely cost to drill and complete the wells contemplated in the offerings, and consequently how much the investments would likely earn. Faulkner received estimates for drilling and completion costs -- known as Authority for Expenditures ("AFEs") -- from the operators that actually drilled and completed oil and gas wells. Instead of including these estimates in the Offering Memoranda, however, Faulkner, without basis, grossly inflated these estimates and then included his bloated figures in the Offering Memoranda provided to investors. BOG (and later Crude Energy and Patriot) then tied the price of units in the investments to these inflated cost estimates and sold the investments on a lump sum or "turnkey" basis to investors.

15. Because BOG (and later Crude Energy and Patriot) was entitled to retain the investor proceeds it raised in excess of the actual costs of drilling and completing any wells, Faulkner's gross inflation of the AFEs ensured that Breitling would pocket millions of dollars in inflated "profits" from unwitting investors, from which Faulkner could fund his lavish lifestyle.

16. Faulkner also regularly "over-sold" Units. In this regard, BOG regularly sold to investors a larger percentage of working interests in a prospect than BOG actually owned. Rather than disclosing this fact to investors, however, BOG and Faulkner covertly skirted their overselling by moving investors out of the oversold prospect and into different prospects, advising investors that BOG was exercising its contractual right to reassign investors to "comparable" prospects. Contrary to the terms of the Offering Memoranda, however, BOG often placed investors in materially different substitute prospects in different states with different operators, providing materially different ownership interests than those bargained for by the investors.

17. Faulkner's fraudulent scheme also involved the sale of securities backed by royalty and overriding royalty interests. In this regard, BRC and Crude Royalties were "pooling" entities, which raised investor funds, pooled them together, and purchased royalty interests on behalf of all investors. Investments in royalty interests generally were "managed" (collection and distribution of revenue) by the offering entity (BRC, Crude Royalties). Like other offerings from entities in receivership, BRC and Crude Royalties made material misrepresentations and omissions to investors. For example, although investors were led to believe that transaction-based compensation (i.e., commissions) would not be paid in connection with the sale of the royalty interests, salespersons like Defendants typically received a fixed salary of $800 payable every two weeks, equivalent to $20,800 per year, and a specific percentage of every dollar ultimately invested (typically 10%). The pay structure was designed to evade regulatory detection.

18. In furtherance of Faulkner's scheme, and without disclosure to investors, BOG and BRC (and later BECC, Crude and Patriot) extensively comingled the assets they received from investors. Although investor funds were generally received by Breitling in offering-specific accounts, they were almost always transferred thereafter into general “operating accounts” prior to the completion of drilling and other completion costs associated with the offering’s respective well(s), and comingled with the proceeds of investors in other, distinct offerings. Funds transferred to these “operating accounts” included the excess of funds illicitly received by Breitling as a result of the grossly inflated AFEs, which defrauded investors believed would be used to fund the working interest prospects underlying the BOG (and later Crude Energy and Patriot) offerings.

19. Faulkner directed Breitling personnel to pay business expenses from these comingled “operating accounts”, sometimes with respect to oil and gas offerings, meaning that one investor’s money was necessarily being spent on expenses for a different offering. Moreover, it was from these “operating accounts” that Faulkner directed the payment of credit card bills representing millions of dollars in charges for personal expenses, and from which Faulkner was reimbursed for personal expenses which he claimed, without support, were made on behalf of Breitling.

20. From 2011 through 2013, BOG and BRC raised approximately $81.5 million in gross proceeds from investors. During this period, Faulkner misappropriated over $15 million from company coffers.

21. In or about 2013, Faulkner conceived to take BOG and BRC public through a “reverse merger” transaction. A reverse merger occurs when a private company merges into a shell company that is already publicly traded; the private company thereby becomes a public company. The transaction results in a single, publicly traded entity, the name of which is changed to that of the formerly private company, and which is controlled by the owners of the formerly private company.

22. On or about December 9, 2013, BOG and BRC closed the reverse merger transaction through which they acquired the publicly traded shell company Bering Exploration, Inc. (“Bering Exploration”) and renamed it Breitling Energy Corporation (and changed its ticker symbol to BECC). Faulkner, Hallam, and Miller owned over 90 percent of BECC’s common stock through their ownership of BOG and BRC. Faulkner became the President and CEO of the public entity BECC.

23. From December 9, 2013 through February 2016, Breitling raised approximately $68.5 million in additional gross proceeds from investors. During this period, Faulkner misappropriated at least $18.5 million from Breitling.

24. Contemporaneously with the reverse merger, Faulkner created Crude Energy and Crude Royalties and installed BOG and BRC co-founders Hallam and Miller as the officers for said entities. Faulkner “outsourced” BECC’s sales and marketing activities (previously undertaken by BOG and BRC directly) to Crude, including transferring the BECC sales team and other BECC employees to Crude. Crude thereafter undertook to market and offer securities to BECC’s list of public investors.

25. The true nature of the relationship between BECC and Crude (and later Patriot) was not disclosed to investors or in public filings with the Commission. BECC’s public filings disclosed only that BECC and Crude executed an Administrative Services Agreement (“ASA”) contemporaneous to the closing of the reverse merger. The ASA gave the relationship between BECC and Crude an aura of legitimacy and helped make transactions between BECC and Crude appear arm’s-length in nature. In truth, however, Crude (and later Patriot) were mere alter-egos of BECC, and their financials were actually consolidated with those of BECC.

26. In or about March 2015, following a falling out with Hallam, Faulkner transferred these sales and marketing responsibilities from Crude to a new entity called Patriot, with Miller installed as the primary officer for Patriot. The Patriot entity was created just by changing the name of another shell entity owned by Faulkner, Simple Solutions, Inc., to Patriot and Patriot simply continued Crude's operations under a new name. Faulkner opened new bank accounts styled "Simple Solutions d/b/a Crude Energy" in order to intercept incoming checks intended for investments in Crude's offerings and directed Miller (also an officer of Crude) to assign all of Crude's oil-and-gas working interests to Patriot. In or about April 2015, BECC executed an ASA with Patriot containing materially equivalent terms to the ASA between BECC and Crude and disclosed it in a public filing.

27. Pursuant to the ASAs, BECC would give Crude/Patriot access to its client list and oil and gas-prospect list so that Crude/Patriot could market and offer oil and gas prospects to BECC clients. Per the ASAs Crude/Patriot would also provide various "administrative" services to BECC. In exchange, Crude/Patriot would be entitled to certain "management fees" related to the oil and gas-prospects. The Crude ASA included terms for the payment by Crude to BECC of $100,000 per month, $150,000 per oil and gas-prospect delivered to Crude, and a carried interest of 20% in any prospect acquired by Crude for sale to clients. The April 2015 ASA with Patriot increased these payments to BECC to $200,000 per month, $250,000 per oil and gas-prospect delivered to Patriot, and a carried interest of 25% in any prospect acquired by Patriot for sale to clients.

28. In reality, however, Breitling records contain no evidence that either Crude or Patriot made any payments to BECC in connection with the ASAs, and there are no records identifying any recurring monthly payments from Crude or Patriot to BECC for the ASA fees.

Rather, Breitling records reflect a repeated and consistent flow of investor funds from Crude and Patriot to BECC. In this regard, Faulkner caused Crude and Patriot to collectively transfer over $39 million to BECC, a majority of all funds received into BECC accounts.

29. The offering activities of Crude and Patriot mirrored the offering activities of BOG and BRC. Crude and Patriot continued to deliver materially misleading offering documents, including the Offering Memoranda, to potential investors, which omitted Faulkner's and BECC's true relationship with Crude and Patriot. The AFEs contained in the Offering Memoranda continued to be grossly inflated without any reasonable basis. Investor funds were not only comingled in "operating accounts" but outright transferred to a purportedly independent, arms-length company (BECC) and used to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars for Faulkner's BECC American Express bills, including his personal expenses.

30. Additionally, BECC actually consolidated Crude's (and later Patriot's) results of operations in its general ledger, a fact never disclosed to the public in BECC's filings or to investors in Crude's offerings. In this regard, Crude cash balances often represented the majority of the funds reported by BECC as its cash balances in filings with the Commission.

B. Breitling Sales of Securities

31. While Faulkner coordinated Breitling's operations and managed much of the business, Hallam and Miller led the sales efforts and managed Breitling's sales staff. Hallam, Miller, and the salespeople (including Defendants) disseminated Breitling's materially misleading Offering Memoranda for the BOG, BRC, Crude and Patriot offerings and reiterated these misrepresentations as part of their sales efforts to investors. According to BOG's Offering Memoranda, only company officers (specifically Hallam and Miller) would offer and sell working interests to investors, and no one would receive transaction-based compensation. This was a lie.

Crude and Patriot disclosed the potential payment of transaction-based compensation to certain “placement agents,” who would be securities broker-dealers which were members of the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc. However, Breitling paid transaction-based compensation to non-“placement agents,” including Defendants.

32. Breitling and Defendants concealed from investors the payment of transaction-based compensation (commissions) through the use of a patently artificial “bonus” program. Although the purported bonuses paid to Defendants and other salespersons were actually based upon a percentage of the principal invested into the fraudulent scheme, Breitling purported to pay these “bonuses” based on factors such as “attitude”, “attendance”, “enthusiasm,” “initiative,” “professionalism”, “demeanor”, “productivity”, and “promptness”. Breitling and Defendants knew that these payments were actually commissions, and were based on a percentage of the principal investment amounts of the investors they recruited into the fraudulent scheme.

33. Although Hallam and Miller offered and sold these investments to investors and obtained investor funds as a result of material misrepresentations in the offering documents, the sales staff (including Defendants) also received millions of dollars in transaction-based compensation. The salespeople (including Defendants) generally cold-called investors from lead lists or followed up on investor contact in response to Breitling’s public advertising of their offerings. Contrary to representations in the Offering Memoranda however, the salespeople (including Defendants) typically received up to 10-percent commissions on every dollar they helped bring in the door for their integral role in the sales process, including advising prospective investors on the merits of particular investments using the false and misleading offering materials detailed above.

34. Faulkner employed his unlicensed sales team to engage in the general solicitation of the Breitling securities for the purpose of driving the investment of principal into his fraudulent scheme in order to loot these funds for his personal pecuniary gain. The excessive commissions paid to the unlicensed salespeople (including Defendants) was intended to incentivize sales numbers over any other consideration. Faulkner paid his salespeople (including Defendants) these commissions with the intent of growing the fraudulent scheme and his pecuniary gain from that scheme, by inducing as many investors to give over as much money as possible.

35. Moreover, in connection with their sales pitches as part of the unregistered offerings, BOG's (and later Crude's and Patriot's) salespeople (including Defendants) failed to sufficiently determine the accreditation status of investors. The salespeople (including Defendants) relied on investors to effectively self-accredit themselves by posing general questions about their accreditation status and by having investors complete a questionnaire. At no point did the salespeople (including Defendants), or anyone else at BOG (and later Crude and Patriot), attempt to independently verify a potential investor's accreditation status.

36. Similar to BOG, Crude Energy offered and sold working interests in oil-and-gas prospects -- via unregistered offerings -- to investors on a turnkey basis. And Faulkner drafted, edited, and/or approved, Crude's offering materials -- which included Offering Memoranda, marketing brochures, and subscription agreements -- despite the fact that the Offering Memoranda omitted any mention of Faulkner or his affiliation with Crude. Hallam and Miller, who led Crude's sales efforts and managed Crude's salespeople, reviewed the offering materials and were aware that the statements therein were attributable to them and omitted any mention of Faulkner's involvement in the company. Hallam signed marketing brochures for each offering as Crude's CEO, and Hallam, Miller, and Handkins were identified in the brochures as Crude's executives.

While the Crude offering materials listed BECC as the operator for the wells/prospects, it did not disclose Crude's actual relationship with BECC.

37. Moreover, Crude's Offering Memoranda contained misrepresentations and omissions similar to those in BOG's Offering Memoranda, including the use of AFEs that purported to reflect "likely" costs that Crude expected to incur in drilling, testing, and completing each prospect. Crude claimed in its offering materials that it drafted the AFEs; however as with BOG, Faulkner actually drafted them. BECC, listed as the operator of record for the prospects offered to investors, hired a contract operator for Crude's projects. Given that BECC and Crude were not actually drilling the wells, which they had no experience or expertise to do, they had no reasonable or informed basis to estimate the likely costs that would be incurred to drill and complete the wells. None of these facts were disclosed to investors in Crude's Offering Memoranda.

38. Hallam, Miller, and the salespeople (including Defendants) disseminated the materially misleading offering materials for the Crude Offerings and reiterated these misrepresentations as part of their sales efforts. Similar to the misrepresentations in BOG's Offering Memoranda, the Crude Offering Memoranda misstated that working interests would be offered and sold by company officers (specifically Hallam and Miller) who would not receive transaction-based compensation. This was false. As with BOG, Crude (including Defendants) generally solicited investors via cold calling and through internet advertisements, and received transaction-based compensation whenever they brought investors in the door.<sup>3</sup> Moreover, in connection with their sales pitches as part of the unregistered offerings, Crude's salespeople (including Defendants) failed to sufficiently determine the accreditation status of investors. The salespeople (including Defendants) relied on investors to effectively self-accredit themselves by posing general questions about their accreditation status and by having investors complete a questionnaire. At no point did the salespeople (including Defendants), or anyone else at Crude, attempt to independently verify a potential investor's accreditation status.

39. Patriot utilized offering materials drafted, edited, or approved by Faulkner – but signed by and attributed to Miller – which included similar misrepresentations as those in Crude's offering documents. Miller, who led Patriot's sales efforts and managed Patriot's sales staff, never reviewed or edited Patriot's Offering Memoranda even though he knew that the statements contained therein were attributed solely to him.

40. Miller and the salespeople (including Defendants) disseminated these materially misleading, Faulkner-drafted offering materials to investors and used them in selling the Patriot prospects. According to Patriot's Offering Memoranda, company officers (specifically Miller) would offer and sell working interests to investors and would not receive transaction-based compensation. Although Miller offered and sold these investments to investors, the sales staff received millions of dollars in transaction-based compensation for their roles in the sales process.

41. As with BOG, BRC and Crude, Patriot (including Defendants) generally solicited investors via cold calling and through internet advertisements, and received transaction-based compensation whenever they brought investors in the door. Additionally, Patriot salespersons (including Defendants) continued the pattern and practice implemented at BOG and BRC and continued at Crude to not independently verify the accreditation status of investors.

C. Transfers to Defendants

42. Defendants worked on the Breitling sales team recruiting victims into Faulkner's fraudulent scheme. For their efforts, Defendants received transfers totaling over $833,500 from

Breitling entities BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot between February 24, 2011 and February 8, 2016, as demonstrated by Exhibit A attached hereto and incorporated by reference herein, and broken down as to the Defendants as follows:

Transferor	Amount
Madu, Nathan <sup>4</sup>	$ 219,921.00
Okpo, Okoto	$ 204,158.25
Taylor, Derek; Alden Adams, LLC	$ 171,557.72
Trevino, Reymond; Eagle Rio Energy Companies, Inc.	$ 237,868.50

43. These transfers were made to Defendants by Faulkner (though the entities under his control) with actual intent to defraud creditors of Breitling. Faulkner's actual intent is established, inter alia, by the presence of several "badges of fraud," see infra, enumerated in TUFTA § 24.005(b). Moreover, these undisclosed commissions to unlicensed salespersons in Faulkner's "boiler room" incentivized Defendants to place the recruitment of new investors into the fraud above all other considerations. The payments were made with the actual intent of creating new victims of the fraud, who are now creditors of the Breitling entities.

44. As Defendants knew or should have known, they were being compensated for raising proceeds for securities offerings contrary to disclosures made to potential investors with regard to transaction-based compensation. The Offering Memoranda and other offering documents did not disclose that salespersons like Defendants would receive, or were entitled to, transaction-based compensation. In this regard, the transfers to Defendants were concealed from the investors that Defendants were recruiting into the fraudulent scheme. See TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 24.005(b)(3).

<sup>4</sup> The Receiver has obtained a judgment against Madu for this amount, plus post-judgment interest. ECF No. 50.

45. As Defendants knew or should have known, they were not registered with the Commission as brokers or associated with registered broker-dealers with respect to their offer and sale of securities in the Breitling offerings. Moreover, the sales practices undertaken by Defendants constituted “general solicitation”, nullifying the Breitling entities’ reliance on the Regulation D exemption to securities registration. In this regard, the transfers to Defendants were concealed from the investors that Defendants were recruiting into the fraudulent scheme. See TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 24.005(b)(3). Defendants’ participation in the patently artificial “bonus” program further helped to conceal the fact that they were paid commissions for the investors they recruited into the scheme.

46. Additionally, the value of the consideration received by the Receivership Entities was not reasonably equivalent to the value of the amounts transferred to the Defendants. See TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 24.005(b)(8). In this regard, Defendants were compensated with large transaction-based payments, which commissions were commensurate with those received by brokers or others associated with registered broker-dealers with respect to their legitimate offer and sale of securities. Defendants’ work (cold-calling potential investors and investor intake with respect to potential investors that contacted Breitling in response to advertising and other general solicitation of the public) did not require the education, training, licensing, or other expertise that brokers have, nor were Defendants required to undergo the extensive background checks and continuing education requirements of brokers. Defendants were compensated excessively vis-à-vis the work they performed, and did not provide reasonably equivalent value for the large commission payments they received.

47. The transfers to Defendants also occurred shortly before or shortly after substantial debts were incurred by the Receivership Entities. See TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 24.005(b)(10).

As detailed herein, Faulkner grossly inflated the AFEs and then included the bloated cost figures in the Offering Memoranda provided to investors by Defendants and other salespeople. Because the price of units in the investments offered to investors by Defendants and other salespeople were calculated based upon these inflated cost estimates, and because the offering entities were entitled to retain the investor proceeds raised in excess of the actual costs of drilling and completing any wells, each time a Defendant recruited an investor into the fraudulent scheme it created a tort liability vis-à-vis the defrauded investor for, at minimum, the amount of their investment. Defendants were then paid commissions shortly after the Breitling offering entity incurred these new liabilities.

48. Moreover, because Faulkner misappropriated tens of millions of dollars in investor proceeds over the course of the scheme, the Breitling entities were falling further into insolvency, increasingly losing their ability to satisfy their liabilities, which increased with each investor that Defendants recruited into the scheme. See TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 24.005(b)(9). Breitling offering entities regularly were not able to pay their debts as they became due. In several instances, Breitling entities failed to pay their share of the expenses for oil and gas well projects, which triggered a hold on their receipt of revenues from that well. In other instances, Faulkner caused Breitling to settle claims of fraud by disgruntled investors by agreeing to refund their investments, but was not able to make payment of the refunded investment in breach of the settlement.

49. Defendants also received the transfers at issue after Breitling entities had been sued or threatened with suit. See TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE § 24.005(b)(4). Indeed, a steady drum beat of state securities regulatory inquiries and “cease and desist” orders and almost non-stop investor claims of fraud against Breitling began virtually from Day One of the Breitling fraudulent scheme. Breitling lawyers responded to a Texas State Securities Board inquiry in April 2010, almost immediately after BOG began offering securities. In late 2011, BOG and BRC faced a Cease and Desist proceeding initiated by the Pennsylvania Securities Commission alleging that they were selling unregistered securities in Pennsylvania by soliciting investors through their website and then having their sales staff call prospective investors to make securities offerings over the phone to non-accredited investors.

50. Also beginning in the latter half of 2011, Breitling began to receive a steady stream of investor complaints and threats to sue and/or report them to state securities boards, including in August, October and November of 2011; August and November of 2012; February, April, May, July, September, October, November and December of 2013; and October and December of 2014. Breitling's typical response was to "rescind" the investment (i.e., refund the investor's money), and obtain strict confidentiality terms with respect to the matter. Notwithstanding continued complaints and threats of lawsuits from investors, Breitling continued their fraudulent offerings and continued making the transfers of unlawful commissions to Defendants and the sales team, including under the artificial "bonus" program.

51. Under these circumstances, and with this knowledge, Defendants cannot establish that they received the transfers at issue with objective good faith, or in exchange for reasonably equivalent value. Accordingly, because these transfers were made with actual intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors of the Breitling entities, they are avoidable by the Receiver.

IV. CAUSES OF ACTION

COUNT I: Avoidance of Fraudulent Transfers Made to, or for the benefit of, Defendants pursuant to TUFTA §24.005(a)(1)

52. The Receiver incorporates by reference and reasserts the allegations above as if fully set forth below.

53. Faulkner and his confederates operated a fraudulent scheme through the Breitling entities, including BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot. The Breitling entities were inextricably intertwined by Faulkner and his confederates, who operated these entities as a single fraudulent enterprise.

54. BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot transferred at least $833,500 to, or for the benefit of, Defendants between February 24, 2011 and February 8, 2016.

55. Faulkner caused these transfers to be made from the fraudulent scheme alleged herein with actual intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors of the Breitling entities. In this regard, Faulkner caused the Breitling salespersons to be paid transaction-based compensation notwithstanding that the Offering Memoranda and other offering documents did not disclose that salespersons like Defendants would receive, or were entitled to, transaction-based compensation. Faulkner's improper and illegal use of transaction-based compensation was undertaken to incentivize sales of Breitling securities and grow the fraudulent scheme, from which Faulkner misappropriated millions of dollars of investor proceeds.

56. Defendants cannot demonstrate objective good faith in receiving the transfers from BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot. Defendants were aware, or but for gross negligence would have been aware, of the contents of the Offering Memoranda underlying the securities sold by Defendants. These the Offering Memoranda and other offering documents did not disclose that salespersons like Defendants would receive, or were entitled to, transaction-based compensation. Accordingly, Defendants knew, or but for gross negligence would have known, that payment of their transaction-based compensation violated the terms of the Offering Memoranda given to potential investors. Defendants failed to conduct independent due diligence or investigation into the Breitling entities notwithstanding their knowledge that they were being compensated contrary to disclosures made to potential investors.

57. The Receiver was only able to discover the fraudulent nature of the transfers from BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot to, and for the benefit of, Defendants after Faulkner was removed from control of the Breitling entities and after a time-consuming and extensive review of thousands of pages of paper and electronic records and documents relating to the Breitling entities.

58. The Receiver is entitled to the avoidance of the fraudulent transfers from BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot to Defendants in the amounts alleged herein.

59. The Receiver also is entitled to costs and reasonable attorney's fees related to the commencement and prosecution of this litigation pursuant to TUFTA §24.013.

COUNT II: Money Had and Received

60. The Receiver incorporates by reference and reasserts the allegations above as if fully set forth below.

61. The funds transferred from the Breitling entities -- in particular, from accounts of BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot -- to or for the benefit of Defendants in equity and good conscience belong to the Receivership Estate. Defendants received these funds through the taking of undue advantage vis-à-vis the investors in the Breitling fraudulent scheme.

62. Defendants have been unjustly enriched by such funds, and it would be unconscionable for them to retain them.

63. In order to carry out his duties as ordered by this Court, the Receiver seeks complete and exclusive control, possession, and custody of the transfers received by Defendants.

64. Defendants have been unjustly enriched by their receipt of transfers from BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot. The Receiver, therefore, is entitled to disgorgement of all transferred funds they received. Pursuant to the equity powers of this Court, the Receiver seeks a judgment that: (a) funds transferred to Defendants from BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot unjustly enriched them; (b) funds transferred to Defendants from BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot are property of the Receivership Estate held pursuant to a constructive trust for the benefit of the Receivership Estate; and (c) Defendants are liable to the Receiver for amounts equaling the amount of funds transferred to them, or on their behalf, or for their benefit, from BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot.

65. The Receiver was only able to discover that the Defendants hold, and were unjustly enriched by, funds which in equity and good conscience belong to BOG, BRC, Crude Energy, and Patriot after Faulkner was removed from control of the Breitling entities and after a time-consuming and extensive review of thousands of pages of paper and electronic records and documents relating to the Breitling entities.

66. The Receiver is also entitled to costs and reasonable attorney's fees related to the commencement and prosecution of this litigation.

V. ACTUAL DAMAGES

67. Breitling entities, and therefore the Receiver, have suffered the loss of at least $833,500 in funds fraudulently transferred from the Breitling entities to the Defendants as alleged herein. Additionally, the Receiver is entitled to recover his just and reasonable attorneys' fees and costs, subject to Court approval, for it would be inequitable not to award such fees to him.

VI. CONDITIONS PRECEDENT

68. All conditions precedent to filing this Complaint have been met.

VII. PRAYER

WHEREFORE, the Receiver requests that the Defendants be summoned to answer this Complaint, that the case be set for trial, and that upon final judgment the Receiver recovers the damages as alleged herein, including without limitation at least $833,500 fraudulently transferred to and for the benefit of Defendants and other actual damages, costs and expenses of suit, including reasonable attorneys' fees. The Receiver prays for such other relief to which he may be justly entitled.
